LAUNCHING
The purpose of "Slow Down and Live" originally from the Northeast and was carried last summer to include the Southern states. The program proved so successful that it was repeated this year. The program's purpose is to educate the public to the hazards caused by speed. When speed is controlled, serious accidents are reduced.

State Safety Coordinator Gilmer stated that again the Press and radio would be playing an important role in this educational project. A great deal of assistance is being given by the Outdoor Advertisers Association.

"But," he stressed, "the final success depends on the driver behind the wheel and his attitude toward 'Slow Down and Live.' Safety is everyone's responsibility."

Bees Take Up Reside In Beyer's Attic

By CAROLINE KIEFFER

Last week, Father Hubert Posena of St. Augustine's Seminary assisted Charles Beyer in clearing his home of a swarm of several thousand bees that had taken "aquatic rights" in the Beyer residence on Carroll Ave. for the last three years.

While the Beyer family lived peacefully on the first and second floors of their home, these busy little bees made honey all day in the attic of the house.

About three years ago, a swarm of bees, led by their queen, gained entrance through an opening left around a drain pipe of the house. Father Posena, who is an authority on bees, said the swarm may have come from the Seminary, where he raises the honey bee, or they may have been from some other swarm.

At any rate, they moved in with their queen, the workers, the drones and the soldiers. According to Father Posena, bees look for a secluded, quiet place to build the comb to store the honey. When they have settled in a desirable location, they begin their work of gathering pollen and nectar from flowers and making honey.

The honey supplies them with food, and during the winter months, when there are no flowers, they live on the surplus which they store for such times.

When the bee is raised for cultivated honey, frames are built and suspended. When the wax combs are filled it is relatively easy for the keeper of the bees to remove the square comb and obtain the product.

However, when the bees have no frames to work in, they attach their work to walls, between rafters.

The frames built by bee raisers are usually about two feet square, but the combs removed by Beyer and Father Posena were between four and five feet in height.

The bee begins his building from the top of a rafter and works down. It was quite a difficult operation to remove these combs, without enraging the bee. Through some unknown method of communication, the bees sense if any of the swarm are injured or killed, and become angry, buzzing menace who fights to protect himself and his labors.

It was impossible to cut through and reach the combs from the walls and rafters without killing some of the bees.

Bees are sensitive to weather conditions, so when work is to be done of gathering honey and clearing the combs, such as was done at the Beyer home, a clear, sunny, dry day was selected, as bees are less likely to become angry in clear weather.

Mr. Beyer, clearly of the weather, was able to handle the bees with only a well-protecting jacket. He does not work with gloves.

Bees are affected by the reactions of humans. A nervous condition reflects itself, and they in turn become nervous and restless, and are likely to become angry.

A calm, detached attitude is essential when working with bees. Some honey bees are quite mild tempered, and unless duly provoked do not attack. These are the golden colored bees called Italian bees. Then there are other species which are ill tempered most of the time. This is a small, darker bee, known as the Caucasian.

Certain scents from the human body affect the bee. The breath of man is likely to provoke wrath. Unpleasant body odors are not liked by this fastidious little insect.

Father Posena was unable to locate the queen. Had he been able to find her, he could have moved her safely to the hives at the Seminary and the rest of the swarm would have followed. However, without the queen, the only way that the Beyer home can be freed of the bees is by killing them with some type of insecticide.

They can become dangerous in swarms, and damage property by working between walls of a house. Part of the plaster and portions of wood frames had to be removed from the Beyer home to scrape the combs built by this swarm.

Father Posena estimated approximately 20 pounds of honey was removed, plus great weight in the wax combs.

Another interesting feature of the bee is that when it becomes frightened, it makes for the comb and saturates itself with honey. Overeating causes a lethargy which makes the bee unable to fight viciously. Bees also can be lulled by smudge pots. The soft blowing or fanning of the smoker acts as a sort of anesthesia creating a calming and drowsy effect.

WASHINGTON FLOODED WITH SPRING VISITORS
Junior high and high school students are continuing to pour into Washington and more and more are beginning to arrive through the middle of June. The Board of Trade says over 300,000 students visit the city every year. One of the guides who take the young folks around says that the younger ones almost always want to walk up or down all 888 steps of the Washington Monument. Another favorite stop is the FBI where real G-Men serve as guides. Among favored souvenirs are empty cartridges from the G-Men's famed shooting gallery in the basement of the Justice Department.

up, someday when they were expecting you.
"Most of the patients are young and hate to have to be in the bed, and the days do get awfully long and lonely after awhile. There are so many things we could do for them if we had some help.
"Right now, for instance, we have a brand new piano that we use both in the recreation hall and on the wards. If we could just find some attractive and vivacious young girls and boys who could just sit down and play requests, why we could roll the piano all over the hospital, and just watch the sun come out in the wards! Of course there are people on the base who can play, too, but it's just not the same as an outsider.
"Another thing that really goes over big are skits and plays. The men are still talking about the day the Girl Scouts from Bay St. Louis came over. They love barber shop quartets, bands, or even several pieces. And of course, games of all kinds. Needless to say, too, anything to eat is super, particularly if it's homemade.
"In addition to recreation, we could really use some help in other ways, too, but perhaps Biloxi may be a little too far for a regular weekly or daily stint for volunteers. However, even if anyone in the Bay would like to do something without leaving home, perhaps they might like to give the men a chance to get out of the hospital once in a while. They love to fish and crab off piers, and of course picnics and barbecues and just plain "fun" are always a big hit.
"We are so grateful for all the things the people of Bay St. Louis and its surrounding areas have been doing for the men at Keesler through the Red Cross Council," Mrs. Boagy and Miss Thomas concluded. "We already know they realize how very much it means to the men, and do hope that they will help us to expand our activities, which will be impossible without their help."

NEW PIANO PLANT
Construction of an $850,000 plant, at Corinth, to house the Rudolph Warbler Co. of Chicago is scheduled to get underway in June. Citizens approved a BAWI bond issue last month by a vote of 1944 to 20 to finance the 100,000 square foot building. The plant, which will manufacture electronic pianos and employ about 300 men, will be located on an 86-acre site on the GM&O Railroad.
"The worst traffic problems are on main highways and in cities, but some indication of the state's needs can be shown from the fact that there are still more than 22,500 miles of unsurfaced roads in the state," said Clarence E. Wilson, vice president for this

Baseball Players Needed In Mississippi Rapidly In Southeastern US

A few quick steps to catch an only pop fly—what doesn't occur often. All runs are scored with imaginary runners on imaginary bases.

The pitcher takes his place about twenty-five feet in front of the batter while his partner gets behind the batter—the catcher's position. The object is to get the batter to take a swing at the curving half-rubber ball. One miss with the catcher catching the ball is an out, retiring the side—for each team has only one out an inning.

The batter can swing all day at the half-rubber but he isn't out until the catcher catches the ball before it hits the ground. Of course a pop fly to the pitcher, or the catcher, is the other way to put the batter out.

Hits are made according to the distance the ball travels past the pitcher. There are no foul lines, but the balls aren't hit often too far to the right or the left of the plate.

A single is chalked up when the ball (half-rubber) is hit past the pitcher. Doubles, triples and home runs are made by the players own ground rules. Objects such as bushes, telephone poles, fences, mailboxes are good markers.

Says the ball about thirty feet in back of the pitcher would be the two-base hit marker; the telephone pole another thirty feet could be the triple line, and the fence, another thirty feet, would be the home run spot. Or maybe you can say hitting the ball over the triple line in the air would be a home run.

Runs are scored only by forcing them in. If the leadoff batter gets a triple, the next connects for a double, another double or two singles would be needed before the first runner scores.

A double play is made when with a runner on base the batter tips the ball with the catcher catching it, or the batter hits a fly to the pitcher. A triple play is registered when with two or more runners on base the batter hits the ball over his head and it is caught by the catcher or the pitcher.

The hardest part of the game is controlling the half-rubber. But once the pitcher gets the knack, he can hurl rises, curves, drops and even knuckles.

"In or out of Legion circles it is not possible to find a person more capable of bringing to legions and the public information on the principles, policies and activities of the organization. Hank's long period of service with the organization, and especially that portion as National Adjutant where he has had a finger on the pulse of every activity in which the organization participates, gives him a background of knowledge and experience not to be found elsewhere. The manner in which he has met his duties and obligations of his office is sufficient testimony as to his ability and, adding to that what we would term a "jam-up good fellow" and a good talker, we can, with all assurance, bank on there being a treat in store for us at our department convention in the message Hank Dudley will bring to that gathering."

In making this announcement, Commander Carr issued the following statement:

"The recompense for service as department commander, or in any other leadership capacity in the American Legion, is the same as it is for service in the ranks—the satisfaction of rendering service to one's fellow-man and Nation, and to his God through his service to these lesser creatures."

"In this satisfaction there are highlights, incidents or events which stand out in memory and which are treasured over and above the ordinary. Among the highlights of my administration as department commander, and very high on the list, is the satisfaction of being able to present to the legionnaires of my state and such of the public as may be interested such outstanding speakers and personalities as our national adjutant.

Many friends as "Hank" (and no other title fits) was appointed National Adjutant of the American Legion on May 3, 1941, the sixth national adjutant in the 30-year history of the organization. He came to this position with a background of more than 22 years experience in leadership in post, department and the national affairs of the American Legion.

In this experience which Dudley brought to his responsible position was almost five years as assistant national adjutant. Prior to that he had served as adjutant of the Omaha Post, now the largest post in the world; adjutant of the Nebraska Department, as a field secretary and as director of the National Field Service as well as other capacities at the national level of the organization.

Hank, veterans of WW I service, was recalled to active duty with the Nebraska National Guard in which he was serving as a captain, and was discharged Feb. 10, 1941.

His membership in the organization dates from October, 1919, before he was discharged from the service when he joined the Broadway Post in New York City. He transferred his membership to Omaha Post No. 1 upon returning to Nebraska where his membership has remained continuously since.

FEED PRODUCTION

Grain sorghum is growing in popularity with Mississippi farmers. Combine grain sorghums are low growing, and hegar grows six to ten feet tall.

Both require about the same fertilizer treatment. Hegar at harvest time can be grazed off, cut in bundles and shocked to dry, or the heads can be cut off by hand and the stalks used for grazing.

Combine grain sorghum can be harvested direct with the combine as it is a low growing plant. A good variety of this is Martins milo.

Grain sorghum can be planted on land that was too wet for early spring planting. Grain sorghum is drought resistant.

Plant six to eight pounds of seed for a good stand. See your County Agent for specific recommendations.

Early June is just about the deadline for planting sorghum for silage.

HAY

Sudan and millet make good hay if cut in the first bloom stage. However, this hay is hard to cure, as it takes several days to dry. A good suggestion here is that if you have too much for grazing, put some up for silage and then if any is left, cut it for hay.

Fleahoppers are causing damage in many cotton fields. This tiny, about 1/4 inch long, bug is blinding, pin-point, square.

Early set bolls are heavier and fewer are required to make a pound of seed cotton than are later set bolls. So protect your crop.

Loss of the early pin-point squares can also cause the cotton plant to put on excessive vegetation and develop a "whip-like" stalk.

Watch your cotton closely and when you see the fleahoppers and notice their damage, begin poisoning. Poison at weekly intervals for three weeks.

Use of ground equipment for early season control is more economical. Dusts and spray insecticides are equally effective against this pest.

See your county agent and get a free copy of the 1941 Cotton Insect Control Recommendations. Study the section on early control.

The demonstrations will be held near Clarksdale June 7, and near Tchula June 9. They are especially designed to help the farmer do a better irrigation job and to enable the farmer who has not yet bought irrigation equipment to decide the method he will use on the farm.

Dr. Ivan Wood, Irrigation Specialist, Federal Extension Service, Washington, D. C., will be on hand to assist with the demonstration.

Some of the subjects to be covered at the demonstration will be how to determine soil moisture, how to apply needed water, infiltration rate, length of run.

Necessity is the Mother of Invention...

You and your neighbors are using more natural gas every year. To meet the rising demand, the gas industry has developed amazing tools and techniques that help locate new reserves of gas two miles and more down in the earth.

Behind the adequate, dependable supply of gas you enjoy are trillions of cubic feet of reserves. They are made possible by the round-the-clock exploration and drilling program of producers who invest many millions of dollars each year to assure future supplies. It's a risky business, but the producer, with your encouragement, will continue finding new fields, for he understands...

...this is a search that must never end

Time of daily drilling operations are often concentrated every 10 to 15 minutes, about 100,000 feet in the long, early search for natural gas.
